This 18-hour professional development course provides support to participants on behavior management strategies within a classroom environment while using a collaborative approach based on participants' knowledge to enhance and enrich the learning experience.

Broadening your behavior management "tool box" is what this course is about.

We will examine the importance of relationships with students, and specific behavioral programs new and old, including but not limited to:

- Love and Logic
- PBIS
- Nurtured Heart
- TRIBES
- Social Thinking
- Behavior management planning
- Behavior consequence feeling language
- Stand-alone created classroom behavior plans

Specific case studies and scenarios will be discussed, and support models within your districts will be planned out. The work will be tied into the Danielson Framework for Teaching, especially Managing Student Behavior. Discussion of standards that support Educator Effectiveness, as well as Professional Development Plans, will also occur.

Join educators across grade levels, experience and school districts for a shared learning experience!

Stacy Sergent has been an elementary educator for 20 years with the Oregon School District. Her experience with behavior has developed over the course of her teaching career, through courses taken, and programs studied. On behavior management, Stacy has mentored many student and practicum teachers, new teachers, and colleagues. sls2@oregonsd.net

Course objectives: Participants will discuss and develop "tools" needed to be successful with behavior management. Also discussed will be behavior studies and scenarios, and what districts currently have in place. Depending on participants' interests, other behavior programs and resources can be addressed.
